

Mission Statement

Imani means "faith" in Swahili and Revelations means "to reveal divine truths". I believe that all things are revealed through faith and all living beings are a unique and divine expression of the Most High God.

I seek to preserve and share the finest cultural traditions of African, African Native American, and African American storytelling, praise dance, song, and dramatic presentations. As a griot (storyteller), I seek to preserve the cultures I come from. I strive to plant seeds of faith: faith in God, self and divine purpose. I seek harmony, peace, love and respect for all living beings. I consider my motto to be: "Faith is the obstacle jumper of all impossibilities."

It is my deep belief that "the tongue of the wise brings healing" (Proverbs 12:18). I love inspiring others, through the stories, to help them transform their lives. I seek to encourage others, through cultural stories and my personal testimonies, to reach their divine purpose and seek love, justice and peace in the world!
